'Pepeng' slams Cagayan, veers away from still-devastated city

By Inquirer Northern Luzon

TUGUEGARAO CITY—TYPHOON "PEPENG" YESTERDAY skirted Metro Manila and environs, sparing fearful flood survivors who had lost homes and loved ones, but hit this Cagayan capital with heavy rains and strong winds starting at noon, killing three people.

What was earlier described by the Pagan weather bureau as a potential super typhoon toppled hillside roads and trees, ripped off roofs even of newly built houses, and severed power and communication lines in Cagayan and Isabela. Reports of rising floodwaters in low-lying sections of the city were received between 1 and 3 p.m.

Storm Signal No. 1 posted for Metro Manila was lifted. Except for sporadic rains, the typhoon was hardly felt in the metropolis.

Killed were a man who drowned after he was swept away by strong current while crossing a river in San Mariano town in Isabela. Another man died after falling off a roof while an 18-year-old boy was running after he fell into a drainage canal in Bengala City. Melibiano Castro, director of the Office of Civil Defense (OCD) in Cagayan Valley, said decision making on preparations for the typhoon was helped by the early forecasts of an international website that Pepeng would strike land-

Picking up the pieces, moving on, hoping

By Jocelyn R. Uy and TJ Burgonio

CLASHING RAIN ON MONDAY morning is being endured again. Yet, the supply has been restored. Clearing and cleaning operations are in full swing. Farmers are ready to plant.

A week after floods from Tropical Storm "Ondoy" ravaged the reaches of Metro Manila to ruins, and a ravaged national government grappled to help the tens of thousands of flood victims, life in the capital is slowly returning to normal.

Even as countless number of residents are still struggling to cope with the destruction while bracing for the likely effects of yet another typhoon, the government is taking steps to put Metro Manila and the rest of the country back on track, officials said at a National Disaster Coordinating Council (NDCC) meeting with President Macapagal-Arroyo yesterday.

Water supply is the worst-hit dis-triction has been restored, repair of damaged telecommunication facilities and infrastructure has started and alternative evacuation centers have been identified to free the schools packed with homeless flood victims to hold classes again.

The epic levels of rainfall brought by Ondoy last week endangered residents of Metro Manila, killing at least 200 people and injuring five. The NDCC said 42 people are still missing.

Mr. Arroyo on Friday declared the entire country in a state of calamity to ensure that all government resources are ready for a worst-case scenario as the country braces for the arrival of Super typhoon "Pepeng."

According to Metropolitan Waterworks and Sewerage Systems Administrator Diosdado Alado, the eight water pumping stations in its met zone, however, which sustained the brunt of the flooding, have all been restored as of dawn yesterday.

Carnival in Rio, rebuff for Obama; Olympics first time in South America

COPENHAGEN/RIO DE JANEIRO

—Rio de Janeiro was a second-round vote on Friday (Saturday in Manila) to stage the 2016 Olympics in South America in 2016, snuffing US President Barack Obama, who had personally lobbied for his adopted hometown Chicago.

The decision by the International Olympic Committee in Copenhagen sparked joyful scenes dancing on Rio's Copacabana beach and shocked disbelief on the streets of Chicago, which had been considered the front-runner.

Rio's victory was heralded as signaling Brazil's arrival as a major economy by President Luiz Inacio Lula da Silva, who begged soccer great Pele and broke down in tears of joy as he celebrated a momentous victory in which he played a key role.

Rio's 6 million citizens believe the games—the first Olympics for South America—have the power to transform the entire region, promote social integration and leave a lasting legacy in a city known for its striking landscape and pristine beaches, but also grinding poverty and shocking homicide rates.

More aid coming for 'Ondoy' victims

By Amy K. Bono

MORE AID FROM FOREIGN and local donors continued to pour in yesterday for flood victims in Western Manila and its surrounding provinces.

"Yesterday the Australian government committed to provide another P80 million to support urgent food relief efforts for victims of Tropical Storm 'Ondoy,'" US School of the Australian government and people, I said. "It's a beautiful commitment to the people of the Philippines for the loss of life and destruction resulting from these devastating floods."

Another commitment will support the provision of emergency food relief, including high-energy biscuits, to children under 5.

In addition, Australian technical experts are also working on the ground providing logistical and communication support in the response and relief efforts of the government and LGUs.

The United States is also helping the Philippines with relief efforts.

US State Department spokesperson has fully told reporters Friday that the United States sends its condolences to flood victims.

The US military mobilized disaster relief operations across the country Friday in response to a series of typhoons, earthquakes and severe storms that have devastated the region, the top US commander in Asia said.

US Pacific Command chief Admiral Timothy Lanning told reporters "very significant disaster relief operations are under way" in Western Luzon, the Philippines and Indonesia.

Two amphibious ships, the US Navy's T-ESB and the USNS, were on the coast of Manila with hundreds of seamen on board ready to provide medical aid and other help if needed.

Filipino workers in Hong Kong have raised money to buy food for flood victims in Baguio, Iligan, General Santos and the cleanup of their neighborhood, according to Robert Reyes said yesterday.

Reyes, group, today, he said, will come to Manila during a food relief event attended by many survivors last Sunday in Hong Kong, a day after news of the typhoon hit the Philippines.

"It's important to help people as much as possible to clean up the damage and look for employment," he said.

Meanwhile, the Department of Social Welfare and Development (DSWD) has allocated P80 million worth of monthly funds for eight regions in anticipation of the effects of Typhoon "Tepang" and for the relief and rehabilitation of flood victims.

Calat said that of the amount, P30 million are funds while P50 million represent food and non-food commodities that have been distributed to the DSWD central office and field offices.

The regions that will receive the monthly funds are the National Capital Region (NCR), Cordillera Administrative Region (CAR), Ilocos, Cagayan Valley, Calabarzon, Central Luzon, Negros, Mindanao, Marikina, Iloilo, and Palawan.

The Bureau of Immigration has joined other government agencies in extending assistance to flood victims as it mobilized its staff and staff to conduct relief operations for victims of the disaster.

US Commissioner Nancy Ulloa said that the Philippine Olympic Committee (POC) will help the government in providing relief and addressing the needs of victims.

Marikina classes resume tomorrow

By Edwin C. Tardios Jr.

STILL REFUSING TO RETURN to normal after being hit hard by Tropical Storm "Ondoy," the Marikina government yesterday announced that classes would resume in Marikina.

"We have to start the classes since many areas are no longer flooded. Otherwise we will have to go back to school," said Mayor Marikina Fernando.

The mayor said families returning to the schools that have been converted into evacuation centers would just have to go back to their homes.

That includes Maria Magda, 16, who is staying at the St. Michael's Elementary School with her husband and three children, said the mayor. He said that the school is a safe place to go to since it is a school.

'Pepeng' lets Albay keep helping Metro

Province execs, communities go full blast in relief campaign

NEARLY UNSCATHED BY typhoon "Pepeng," communities in the Bicol region that had feared disaster from the new storm pointed on the chance to continue helping victims of Tropical Storm "Ondoy" in Metro Manila and Bicol province.

Residents of Albay from all walks of life, groups, private firms, local radio and TV stations, schools and local government units are launching a campaign to help Ondoy victims.

"Though disaster got also gone we want to enjoy the kind of solidarity of the Bicol people after Super typhoon 'Reming' last year," said Albay Governor Benjamin Sagor Jr. in a letter to the Bicol Regional Office of the National Disaster Preparedness Training Center (NDPTC) in Manila.

Sagor said the Bicol region would pick up the slack in the aftermath of the disaster and help the victims in the aftermath of the disaster.

safety tips after a flood

After a flood hits your home, be very cautious before you power up, plug and turn on your appliances.

Check if your house is the only one without power or if it's the whole neighborhood. If your home is the only one without power, you need to check your home electrical system. Ask a competent licensed electrician to do this for you.

Please remember these helpful safety reminders:

- Make sure that the main electrical power switch or circuit breaker is turned off.
- Unplug all equipment and appliances. Turn off switches of permanently connected equipment. Unscrew all light bulbs if possible.
- Remove mud and dirt from the service equipment or main circuit breaker/fuse and its enclosure, using protective gear or equipment such as rubber gloves, rubber-soled shoes and well-insulated pliers.
- As a safety precaution always assume the wires are "hot," "live" or energized whenever working.
- Allow convenience outlets, switches, electrical wires, sockets, connectors, breakers and other devices to dry completely. Drying may take days, depending on how wet the system is and on external temperatures.
- When all electrical wires and accessories are dry and clean, proper testing must be done to ensure the integrity of the electrical system.
- Appliances must be completely dry and serviced or checked by a licensed electrician or service center agent.
- Do not turn on damaged electrical appliances.
- Be observant and watchful after powering up your house to immediately detect any abnormalities.

IMPORTANT REMINDER: If your electric meter was submerged in water, please report this to the Meralco hotline number 16211 or text to 0917-889-2824 or 0925-008-2824. You may also call the Meralco hotline number if you need the services of a licensed electrician.

Please remember...

SAFETY FIRST.

Stay put in evacuation centers, victims told

By TJ Bergstein and staff/Arnold B. Uy

HOURS BEFORE TYPHOON "PEPENG" SLAMMED into Cagayan last night, President Macapagal-Arroyo advised thousands of flood victims to stay longer in evacuation centers in Metro Manila and elsewhere, and let the storm pass.

"We have received reports that the storm would fall in Cagayan, but many people were leaving evacuation centers for home. In necessary circumstances, we suggested that they spend one more night in evacuation centers," she said in a media interview before presiding over a meeting of the National Disaster Coordinating Council (NDCC) in Camp Aguinaldo.

Tuesday, he had advised flood victims to spend two more nights in evacuation centers where they would be safe from rain and floods, warning that until there was no assurance of a low weather they must not go home yet.

"That are still rains now, plus know what amount of rain this will bring but mostly as a consequence of Pepeng but as an after effect," said Troncoso following the NDCC meeting.

He said the government would send the victims home "as soon as possible" but with the potential rain on the typhoon strikes the northeastern part of the country, the government was rather trying to make evacuation centers better than thinking of already sending them home.

Even if Super typhoon Pepeng died in the storm, leaving the threat to disaster zones such as Western Manila and some parts of Northern Luzon, it did not mean the threat of rain in these areas, he said.

Staying late a night "rain hour" and it could still reduce the potential rain, he pointed out. It was also a potential hazard for flood victims in Metro Manila to return to their homes as floodwaters in some parts of the capital have yet to subside.

"We would have them to stay but we want them to spend more time... two days will be sufficient," he said.

At the NDCC meeting, Mo Inigo called Chief DepEd, Roberto Domingo, police director and chair of Regional Disaster Coordinating Council in Region 2, to check if he had evacuated and given orders to the Cagayan and the rest of the region.

She learned that more 2,000 families have been evacuated.

Meanwhile, public schools where evacuees are lodged are staying will remain closed until the rain stops. "Schools are advised that some classes in education areas, Central Visayas University in Zamboanga and yesterday.

"The schools that serve as shelters to the evacuees will obviously not open," Calat said the morning. With a report from Rikka Dizon.

Flood victims in Metro jails lack water, clean cells—ICRC

Outbreak of diseases in crowded quarters feared

By Kristine L. Rivas

TWO THOUSAND INMATES in Metro Manila jails affected by Tropical Storm "Ondoy" are in need of safe water and clean shelter, the International Committee of the Red Cross (ICRC) said yesterday.

The ICRC said one of its urgent projects is the aftermath of the massive flooding brought by Ondoy last Saturday was to ensure that inmates in various detention centers have access to clean water and live in decent quarters.

"The storm, the most devastating to hit Metro Manila and reaching provinces to the far west, aggravated the situation in the jails, the organization said.

"Almost 2,000 inmates lack access to safe drinking water and adequate nutrition," says Marco Alvarado, an ICRC water and habitat coordinator.

Serious situation

"The situation in jails, which are already overcrowded, has become extremely serious. Several days after the tropical storm, some facilities remain flooded and isolated, and the delivery of relief is a major challenge," he added.

Improving jail conditions is one of the ICRC's flagship projects in the Philippines.

The organization said their initiatives to improve living conditions in jails nationwide have helped 11,000 inmates.

Last January, three ICRC workers were kidnapped by bandits in Jolo, Sulu, after conducting a jail inspection survey there. The workers were eventually freed.

The ICRC is also coordinating with local government officials to assess the water supply to the affected areas, noting that the risk of acquiring water-borne diseases was high after a severe flooding.

World jockey for point action in Manny Pacquiao's year on a solid case during a three-day sporting event, dominating opponents in the Super 12's first preliminary last Tuesday after a sluggish performance that had induced Freddie Roach (swelling off the arena floor).

"His powerful right swing" a snaking Pacquiao told four weeks at the state side as he worked his way through crowded crowds of shadow boxing toward the end of another training session.

"Roach" he added, "I don't really get it, but he was impressed not only by the fact Pacquiao landed combinations that he didn't expect but also that he was so fast and powerful and so much more than he was."

He's coming to get his timing and he was a lot more focused on it," said Roach. Pacquiao, 34, spent three months with Roach and two with Freddie before Roach allowed the fight down to be open to the public. First, accommodating Pacquiao on a show for those who Roach

"We'll leave (Cotto) swinging at air."

Pacquiao will go for Cotto's WBO welterweight belt in the Nevada preliminary bouts in an attempt to set a seventh world title in as many weight divisions.

However, in heavy rain brought about by Typhoon "Deng" prepared the arena capital for the afternoon, Pacquiao swapped up five more rounds of sparring, taking himself to 12.

But this was different than two days ago, when he got repeatedly tagged by Shemar Denton and pushed around by Urban Antiles.

"He's coming to get his timing and he was a lot more focused on it," said Roach.

Francisco stops Vasquez for super fly title

By Dennis U. Egan, Staff

DRAWN "GOLDEN BOY" FRANCISCO moved closer to a world title shot by stopping former Professional Boxing Council (PBC) champion Roberto Vasquez in the 10th round of his WBA super flyweight international title in the Casino Arena in Las Vegas yesterday.

The 30-year-old Francisco, who started his professional career in 1995, including a 1997 win, gave the former Professional Boxing Council (PBC) champion a steady diet of left-handed left hook, uppercut and right straight to escape his opponent.

JOSE G. Araullo (center), chair of The Real Bank, reads to Lito Pepe for the children who have gathered to hear stories.

Tales from a thriftmonger

Co-founder of venerable auditing firm now tells stories of savings to children

By Christine Medrano
Chapman

LITO PEPE IS THE thrift monger Jose G. Araullo, chair of The Real Bank, gives by these days.

Araullo used to be just plain old Joe among personal friends, the backbencher Joe who co-founded Punongbayan & Araullo, an auditing company that picked itself with high-quality work.

But he turned into Lito Pepe, now popular among kids, when the Real Bank launched the line in a series of books attempting to teach children the values of saving, frugality and honesty.

Yes, Araullo is Lito Pepe in "Mga Kwento ni Lolo Pepe," now a three-book compilation of real life experiences that he has enjoyably shared with pre- and primary school children.

And so long as the money gets saved, the bank's chief still and savings advocate doesn't mind how he comes across.

Prior to setting up Punongbayan & Araullo, the bank chair was an auditor who started with the Bangko Sentral ng

Philippines, then worked in the line management capacities for different private banks including Metropolitan Bank and Trust Company, Philippine Savings Bank, and the Philippine National Bank.

Punongbayan & Araullo went on to become the country's largest auditing firm.

Still, there were very few children's books around—the concept of saving.

In encouraging children to save, the bank came up with a program that allowed kids to open accounts with just P10, starting at 3 percent interest a year.

More to share

"We don't really mean from this scheme. In fact, the bank may even be subsidizing each child on the administrative cost involved in maintaining an account," Araullo commented.

But he remains convinced that this will encourage children to save money.

Because Araullo felt he had more to share in building children's values with regards to savings, he gave the chance up on a publication that detailed his own experiences about frugality while growing up.

Many of them were lessons his parents taught him as a child, even up to when he was a college student in San Bede.

In order to reach the widest number of children, Real Bank developed the project with the Department of Education. Already 50,000 copies of the first book have been disseminated to various public schools, and another 50,000 copies of the second book are currently being distributed.

The third book has just been printed, ready for release.

The book project just had been overseen by teachers and writers, helping the bank's mission to extend the project.

New books are currently in the pipeline, all intending to instill positive values that children hopefully will bring to adulthood, even if learned indirectly through the story of Lito Pepe.

Araullo says he wants to give people the chance to have a mission. The advocacy campaign represents the bank's commitment to building the next generation.

"We want to make a difference in the lives of our countrymen," he says. "We don't want the bank to be just any ordinary bank, we want the bank to have a difference."

For a small bank with 24

branches based mostly in early-provinces around Metro Manila, the idea of taking up an advocacy in part of its responsibility reflects the deep commitment of management and owners.

The cost of this advocacy has been substantial, considering the size of the bank," Araullo says. "We've even more in the line of thrift banks," he adds.

But it is something that the bank believes in doing, and continuing.

Araullo himself knew people in general have stopped saving.

"We could use some money for our old age. We need to put aside part of our earnings to save to have the option to be an entrepreneur and not just an employee-earning," he stresses. "I would not have been what I am today if I did not learn how to be thrift and learn how to save."

28 percent

Araullo says he always sets aside 28 percent of what he earns.

He points out two living examples who have become entrepreneurs because they were thrift. Had self-discipline, patience and courage. Henry B.

of the FM Group of Companies and John Gokongwa of Robinsons.

People who save, Araullo

says, can become entrepreneurs. In fact, he adds, entrepreneurship is one trait that the bank will teach its children.

Who knows what Araullo will think of next? One can always trust Lito Pepe because, with auditing comes a better life.

For a couple, manna came in the form of 'pan de sal'

By Mariel D. Salazar

ALL THE LATE DINNERING BAKERS OR related used to bring back the way you do it and need to be (2009).

He was not satisfied how the business might be being made and he was also proud with his shareholders.

He continued his son and daughter in law, Dina and Dina, to put up a small bakery in Manila. The older brother urged the couple to sell pan de sal using his recipe.

In the years that followed, the bakery earned the respect of customers and opened a legal following. It also grew into a chain of branches in different parts of Metro Manila.

One day, Dina and Dina were a lot because of the bakery's sales of its 1000-gram pan de sal and its affordable price.

The couple said that even though prices of ingredients had been on the rise, they still managed to keep the price tag at 35.00 pesos, according to the cost of their pan de sal.

This is mainly because "we use little to create a whole market," said Dina and, as for the couple, they had to be honest.

Another reason was his father provided him to bake and sell pan de sal, again. The son was hard to convince, he said. It was from when they had to be honest.

He eventually gave in to the idea, giving the couple a few weeks just to satisfy his father's wish.

But Dina and Dina were not the number of people who came to their bakery every morning asking for their pan de sal. It was the same delivery afternoon.

The couple has now added a restaurant beside the bakery, serving Filipino dishes at reasonable prices.

They also opened branches in Cebu, Manila, and White Plains, selling two types of pan de sal. The original pan de sal from the Philippines, a larger version of their pan de sal, and a smaller version, and the Big Boy Land, which Dina said is not of course to be taken.

No additives

In 1990, he was a self-sufficient baker in the 1990s. He worked as a baker, or driver of the Philippine version of a truck, to transport his ingredients to his bakery. He would sell pan de sal to his customers.

Early on, he realized the potential of his product to be used to become a powerful brand.

And he had to be honest about his father's secret recipe. One of the most important things he learned was to be honest about his father's secret recipe. One of the most important things he learned was to be honest about his father's secret recipe.

He said, "I never have to be honest to make the same for my bread as I do for my customers."

They only use Glaxo, which is, whole wheat, and hard wheat. They use that they were not bread makers.

But the American's products are baked every single day. They also baked their own pan de sal, which is, whole wheat, and hard wheat. They use that they were not bread makers.

"We don't want to be the same as the others," he said, "because that's a key to our success."

However, they are quick to add that they are quite happy with the way they are. The business is growing and they are proud of it.

But the couple not only use their own recipe for their bread, but also for their other products. They are like family, he said, and they are like family.

Partners in trade
Some of their employees have been with them for up to 10 years. The couple would not have partners and the business would not have been successful.

DINA and DINA Schuler had great luck in the bread recipe business. The couple later put up a restaurant beside their bakery (left).

even a share of the company's profit from the government's cash money.

When you engage people in a business and treat them as family, they will give their all," he said. "It's because you're not just a business, you're a family."

Couple smells a fortune in perfume business

Reporter, Southland Journal

OLAMEN CITY—IT IS NEVER too late to start up a business.

Only this April, Leopoldo and Arlene Barrios, both in their 50s, opened their perfume business, operating out of their own location in Encarnación, Pinar del Rio.

In their diligent working area, the couple sits and packs their products, while they map out their new living space plan.

"It is just about the right time when this is well going," Arlene said of their business. Their youngest son is seven years old.

Leopoldo and Arlene are mother and father of three perfume bottles, creating it as if it were their life's dream.

"We wanted to have a girl then, but instead we were blessed with two boys. [So] we consider this [business] as our daughter," said Arlene.

Perfume magic
After making only from the Arlene Barrios became a big success story, coming only $200 a day.

Arlene worked as a sales agent of motor pumps, earning only through occasional entry-level earnings.

In January a fellow parent at

LEOPOLDO and Arlene Barrios

their son's school invited Leopoldo to a few livehood sessions.

"The Bigly Bally para Ingresantes" session was a perfect of Arlene Richard Cane, covered through the Latin American government and the University of the Philippines in Los Angeles.

Of the 30 meeting participants, only the Barrios couple was able to make something of it.

The couple immediately embarked on perfume-making at its creating the quick return from the business.

"We only had $5,000 in capital [which] I came from my wife. She was happy because I was able to give it back, double. There's magic to it," said Leopoldo.

He also became a trialist, creating perfume making in his home.

"I got the knowledge for free so I mean give it back specially to my families," he said.

Easy mix

Ingredients include the grape, lavender, propolis glycol, alcohol and other preservative agents mixed in certain amounts, depending on how successful the perfume is.

Leopoldo is now trying to create his own fragrance, doing away with roses in the end will be his target.

He said he had distinctly remembered about the business.

"I can't believe how as I went got confused as I did. I shared the tip. I do the mixing and my wife does the packaging, labeling and marketing."

Arlene said that she would reward the money in her husband who would then deposit it in the bank.

A 30-million bottle of perfume is sold for up to $100 a piece. In a month, the couple earns as much as $40,000 with 20 employees and all over the country.

Walking perfume bottles

"People think we are walking perfume bottles," quipped Arlene, adding that they are happy sharing their products with others.

When plans don't go according to script, keep planning

"In preparing for items I have always found that plans are simple, but planning is a discipline," Leighton D. Kinschman

AS SCENE COMMANDER OF the Alamo Plaza before during World War II, Dwight D. Eisenhower planned, organized, and controlled the largest amphibious assault ever undertaken—the invasion of Germany.

Eisenhower regarded him as one of the greatest military strategists of all time. Even so, Eisenhower considered plans to be essentially useless.

Why plans are useless

• There's no way to control your competitors.

In a hypercompetitive and dynamic world, plans have an increasingly shorter shelf life. As Col. in Powell said, "No battle plan survives contact with the enemy."

At best, we can anticipate the intentions of competitors. When faced with a new reality, we must either scrap our plans or revise our plans.

In business as in war, there's no way to predict the strategies and movements of your opponent. We never have about a competitor could with some (and business plan by) interacting in business life.

Competitors from foreign governments and CIA spying from backcountry (I have just nearly sunk the major record companies, and major record companies have just realized newspaper in its support).

• There's no way to control your competitors.

If you own a small construction firm, then you're probably aware of this principle. A brilliant plan for growth doesn't do any good unless the people are doing it and even better are building.

A LEADER'S WAY

John C. Maxwell

Some of your strategies have the power to create the much needed or to put money back in people's pockets.

The late of Maxwell is a prime example of a company's planning business by items beyond its control. For years ago, when money was tight, and the need for immediate action, he took the time of preparing a business plan for the future and we'd define our mission.

Assessments were on our long and scale when we map out a path for these we find. The reality isn't make a business plan for the future and we'd define our mission.

Planning is indispensable. Planning is the key to success in the life of today. When creating a future plan, we have to be realistic and we're present in our mission.

Assessments were on our long and scale when we map out a path for these we find. The reality isn't make a business plan for the future and we'd define our mission.

Don't blame God, blame botched urban planning

By Kenneth C. Burgess

THROUGHOUT THE HUNDREDS it has rained in Manila, Tagalog Islands' "City of Angels," but each week rains, with a month's worth of rain falling in just six hours.

The rains affected some two million people, but it was the damage to the city by Thursday and the number of people injured or killed that shocked the world. In 2003, an estimated 100,000 people were killed in the 2003 Asian tsunami, but the damage to Manila was far less. Ben10 and Powerpuff Girls Join Shakey's Parties

With the recent tag-up of Shakey's and Cartoon Network, little girls can now dream of Get Power with the Powerpuff Girls and little boys can now fight the alien force with Ben 10 Alien Force.

The occasion for the first time in the Shakey's is a birthday in Cartoon Network for a little birthday party celebration.

Every child dreams of having a birthday party. It is a time when you can be the star of the show. You can go as far as having friends and family to join for their birthday party the day after they turn a year.

Most birthday parties require a lot of work and can be quite expensive. Children parties often require a wealth of good resources. But with the right theme and decorations, you can have a fun, inexpensive birthday party for your child.

Cartoon Network and Shakey's have teamed up to give children a birthday party that is both fun and affordable. Sarah Geronimo: I'm happy; romance can wait

By Harold R. Cruz

AT 21, SINGER-ALTRISS Sarah Geronimo is in no hurry to have a boyfriend. "I'm happy with what I have right now: family and friends are my inspiration," Sarah said as she goes on the her "World's Rarest" concert on Dec. 7. With her tight work schedule, she said, she hasn't had time for school, let alone romance. "I'm busy, busy, busy! Long time no see!" She, the stage actress said, "I'm not looking, though admitted I pray for it."

Before concert artist Made Binolina has been very vocal about his interest in singing Sarah, whom he first met with in the movie "The Rarest of the Rare" (2006). Sarah was briefly linked to TV heartthrob John Lloyd Cruz and Mark Herron.

"Have any plans to have a son?" "They are precious, not just of all of their children," Sarah said. "I have a 25-year-old sister, who is very beautiful. My parents were all of us to finish our studies. In all fairness to them, however, they considered our need for inspiration, for [romance] love. They are pushing for me to meet a God-fearing man, who will take care of me and be a good influence on my life."

Autopsy shocker: Jackson was healthy

LOS ANGELES—MICHAEL JACKSON's outward appearance was normal when he died with pneumonia in his bed, so great were around his body and constant concern over his life and death.

But internally, the pop star was in mostly the physical shape for a 50-year-old man, according to his autopsy report obtained by The Associated Press.

The Los Angeles County coroner's report shows Jackson's weight of 136 to 162 lb (61 to 73 kg) was in the average range for a 57-year-old man. His heart was normal, with no signs of plaque buildup. His kidneys and several other major organs were normal.

The singer did have health issues, however, including arthritis in the lower spine and some fingers, and acid plaque buildup in his arteries. Most serious was the condition of his lungs, which the autopsy report said were chronically inflamed and

Sarah Geronimo: I'm

Until then, Sarah's love was singing and performing. "It can be really big when it goes, and it may seem boring to others... But the moment I lost the audience, I was a different person."
